

LIGHTNING BOLT DESTROYS CHURCH

Orland Twp. M. E. 53 Year Old Edifice Falls Prey To Flames

During a severe electrical storm Monday evening, a bolt of lightning struck the steeple of the Orland Township German M. E. church located northwest of Tinley Park, about 7:30 o'clock. The bolt was a hot one and set fire to the steeple and the flames soon made a roaring furnace of it.

Tinley Park fire department was called and promptly responded with their new fire truck. Upon arrival they found that the 300 gallons of water in the booster tank was inadequate to check the flames, so a long lead of hose was run from the truck to a drainage ditch several hundred feet north of the street on which the church was located.

The new truck performed excellently at a pressure of 160 pounds and continued to pump 500 gallons of water per minute for at least two hours on to the burning structure. The flames however had burned away the supports of the steeple which crashed onto the roof of the church and in spite of all the hard work of the firemen and help from neighboring farms and Tinley Park, the building could not be saved.

The entire interior was gutted by the flames. The roof caved in and only the four walls of the frame building remained standing. Efforts were made to save the pews and church furnishings but very little could be removed from the burning building. The organ, piano, and various books and other materials were destroyed. The edifice was insured for $4,600 and the loss is estimated at more than $10,000.

The church was built in 1885 and has been in constant use ever since by the large and flourishing congregation of which Rev. Chas. Hedler is the pastor.

On Wednesday a large number of members of the church gathered and tore down the remaining walls. The church bell was found in the ruins, but was very badly cracked by the cold water striking it while it was red hot. The bell was the making of 1885.

Whether the destroyed church will be rebuilt or not, has not been decided as yet, but for the time being, Sunday School and Church services will be held in the school auditorium of the Tinley Park public school commencing this Sunday morning. The pastors and congregations of churches in this vicinity sympathize with Rev. Hedler and his people in this heavy loss that they have sustained in the destruction of their church home but hope that they will be able to be re-located in a new church home in the not distant future.

The Orland Township German M. E. church edifice was modernized of late years and was up-to-date with all conveniences.

The church some of which were badly charred and some of the furnishings of the edifice were placed on the cemetery grounds adjoining the church until they could be removed.

Among the remains, were the two large Bibles and pulpit.

Mr. Alvin Andres, a farmer who lives about a quarter mile west of the church, was the first to see the building in flames. He called for help and then rushed to the scene as did other neighbors.

NEW LENOX SCHOOL BOND ISSUE CARRIES

The special school election held at the New Lenox public school last Saturday for the purpose of voting for or against the issuance of $10,799 in bonds to be used as payment toward the $35,000 school addition, carried by a large majority.

The vote was 282 in favor of the bond issue and 25 against.

Four new classrooms are to be added to the present school building and a number of alterations made. The largest portion of the cost will be taken up by PWA grant.

Work on the new addition is expected to be begun sometime this summer and when completed will greatly relieve the highly congested condition of the school which has existed for the past several years.

Relief Problems Seem To Have Hit New Low

By Lottie Holman O'Neill,
State Representative 41st District

This session was called primarily for the handling of relief problems but some other subjects have been included at the insistence of pressure groups in the state. Those subjects will probably not get further than they did at the last regular session according to the signs so far.

The relief problems seem to have hit a new low according to reports of administrations and clients. Load increasing, money gone, taxpayers in rebellion at increased taxes; business bad, it seems to indicate that we are faced with two real problems—to save this government and feed the destitute until they can feed themselves. This sounds pessimistic but there is nothing gained in dodging problems. In Illinois the plan is first to go through every appropriation that was made in the last session and divert into relief channels all money that is not actually contracted. This will mean the elimination of many important and really necessary improvements but the situation is an emergency. You cannot maintain a country's government when the nation is filled with hungry and hopeless people. At the risk of being accused of partisanship, I take this opportunity to say that the only hope of ending this is for the administration in Washington to encourage business by dropping the measures that are intended to further punish so called big business. I hope that every person on relief as well as those organizations in this district or any place else who used their votes to place the present Democratic administration in office will now use their influence to persuade the president to help out in this regard. The sufferers in the ranks should be heard and this is a war. If these groups will turn their activities toward the administration they supported and try to help here it will be a help in Springfield. I have presented bills number 43 and 44, asking for more money from the state when it is found, for relief.

Another controversy before the session is the state school board. The Governor has again presented his plan for a board with more power than some of us can support although we are for a board with advisory power.

At the request of the Illinois Education Association and the State School Board Association I have presented House Bill number 41 providing for a state school board with advisory powers only. We do not believe that a few people should be given the power to withhold from the school districts their position of the state school fund because they have not complied with the rules laid down by such board.

Further comments on the session will be made as it proceeds.

Boy 8, Walks Many Miles For Fried Chicken

Dorothy Ann Rauch is 7 years old and she lives on a farm near Mokena, where they have fried chicken and ice cream every day.

Jack Hunsaker, 8, got to thinking about that Tuesday in the home of his great-aunt, Mrs. Martha Smith, at 13427 S. Francisco Ave., Blue Island, after he had been put to bed with a cold.

Jack knew about the fried chicken and the ice cream on account of Dorothy Ann had dinner at the Smith house Sunday, and she told him about it.

POLITE THING TO DO.

Jack kicked the comforter off his bed, and the more he thought of such swell meals the more he decided the polite thing to do was to pay Dorothy Ann a return visit. He hopped out of bed, climbed out the window and started hitch-hiking toward Mokena.

All night he walked along the highway, his tiring feet eased only by an occasional ride with a motorist. He didn't think how worried Mrs. Smith would be by his disappearance, or realize that she would have the whole Blue Island police force out looking for him.

Just about the time police were discussing the possibility of kidnappers and planning to call out the Boy Scouts to join the search, Jack tramped into the yard of John Borucki, a farmer a mile north of Mokena, Friday.

GET'S HIS CHICKEN—COLD

"I'm a little turned around," he told the farmer. "Can you tell me which way is west?"

Borucki pointed out west. He asked Jack if he was hungry, and fed him some cold chicken—which was pretty good, even if it wasn't fried, and there wasn't any ice cream to go with it.

Then Jack told Baroucki where he lived, and where he was going. The farmer put him in the car, and drove him home. Jack was so tired and so full of chicken that he fell asleep on the way.

His frantic great-aunt was so relieved at having him back that she didn't wake him up, but carried him back to bed.

Then she called up her relative, Alderman Louis Rauch of Blue Island, who is Dorothy Ann's grandfather, and told him to call off the search.

After Jack woke up and told why he had gone to Mokena, Alderman Rauch promised him as much fried chicken and ice cream as he could eat.

St. Mary's June Festival Success

The annual June festival and chicken supper sponsored by the St. Mary's parish at Mokena last Sunday was a great success. The supper held in the basement of the St. John Evan. church was so largely attended that the food supply was sold out very quickly. On the adjoining grounds games were played. A very fine chair was awarded to Roy Krapp of Mokena and a quilt to Mrs. Charles Klappauf of Chicago.

Work of Mokena Artist On Exhibit

Miss Alice Lauffer of Mokena who has been taking a course in Commercial Art in the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts for the past year, has been the recipient of a rather outstanding honor.

In addition to her commercial art course she has been doing some portrait painting. Among these paintings, was a portrait of her friend Miss Lydia Baudry of Mokena. The art judges considered this portrait of such outstanding merit that it as well as a number of her pictures were included in the exhibit of the 36th Annual Academy Exhibit of the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts which begins Thursday June 9th and extends to Sunday June 12 from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. except Sunday when the studios will be closed at 6 p. m.

The exhibition will be the first public display of work by artists, designers, decorators, cartoonists and illustrators who will be the famous names of tomorrow.

"The Lost Word" To Be Given At Tinley M. E.

Next Sunday the Rev. Robt. Pierce will present at eleven o'clock service of the Tinley Park First Methodist Church, the story of "The Lost Word" in the form of a dramatic reading. A work of Henry VanDyke, the "Lost Word" pictures the results that occur in the life of a young man who, for a price, has agreed to forever put the word "God" out of his mind and mouth. The background for the story is ancient Rome in the early days of the Christian church.

This form of a sermon "presented in words conceived in a stranger's heart" is not new to the people of the Methodist Congregation. The Christmas messages for the last two years have been presented in the stories "Dust of the Road" and "The Other Wiseman", the latter also written by Henry VanDyke. If there be anyone who believes that he can live a full and complete life without including God in their living, Henry VanDyke's "The Lost Word" is a message for them. To the rest, it will make us ever more aware of the importance to our world of a living God and an active church. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Canoes Sail On Lake Mokena

The recent heavy rains have converted the lower north portion of the field on the Fred Yunker farm south of Mokena, into a veritable lake.

A number of Mokena youngsters, with a nautical turn of mind, have utilized this body of water for their pleasure by way of sailing canoes on it.

The boys have cut old oil drums in half and are using them as canoes. One youngster happened to get a leaky boat but by giving it an application of tar, succeeded in making it seaworthy.

SUMMER SAVAGES

A Senator's daughter, Marjorie Nye of Cooperstown, N. D., was a "pillow puncher." So was Marjorie Thacker (right) of Minneapolis. They lived in the girls' dormitory, "Sleepy Hollow," and maintained cabins at one of Yellowstone's six camping centers. The government fee for visitors is $3 per car. Additional costs, regulated by the government, depend on accommodations.

TO UNCLE SAM, its proprietor, Yellowstone National Park is so many acres of woodland. But to last year's 499,242 visitors the park is also remembered for its 1,500 "savages," mostly college students who spend their vacations serving park guests. Many come from prominent families. Savages are notorious for their colorful vocabulary. To them visitors arriving in busses (driven by "gear-jammers") are "dudes," while campers are "sage-brushers." Dishwashers become "pearldivers." Laundresses are "bubble queens" and a howling baby is a "lap organ." Most versatile of Yellowstone's savages is the "packrat" who does everything from wheeling grips in a "mollie" (baggage cart) to lighting cabin fires with "dope."

FOTO- FEATURE

Yellowstone offers romance for savages in "rotten logging" as illustrated by a university of Montana collegian and Miss Carol Dean of North Dakota university. Savages also enjoy fishing, mountain climbing and group activities.

College science instructors, like Neil Miner (left) show tourists the park and are called "90-day wonders." At right is William Kearns, assistant park naturalist. A small staff of rangers and naturalists is maintained all year.

Agnes Midgley of Salt Lake City worked as "heaver" (waitress) last summer. She was one of 1,500 savages chosen from among thousands of applications. Workers arrive by June 15 each year, promptly forgetting that last week they were football captains or campus queens. Overnight they awaken winter-weary hotels, cabins and cafeterias. But the park has been open for several weeks.

Use Odds, Ends for Crocheted Rag Rug

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THE diagram shows how the contrasting squares are arranged to give the rug its interesting design. Whatever color scheme you use, black will be most effective for joining the squares and for an edging of single crochet around the outside of the rug. If the materials you have are not the colors you want, don't forget there is always the dye pot.

Producing your own colors may be the most exciting part of rug making.

A crocheted rag rug like the one shown here uses odds and ends. Wool rags make a nicer rug than cotton, or rug yarn may be substituted if desired. Either a wood or large steel crochet hook is used. The rug shown here measures 36 by 21 inches. The 5-inch squares are made separately in single crochet stitch and then joined with crochet slip-stitch. If rags are used, tear or cut the strips not more than 1 1/4 inches wide, and work with the raw edges turned in as shown here at A. Measure each square carefully so they will all be exactly the same size. Full instructions for slip covers for side chairs like the one shown are in the book offered below.

NOTE: Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' book SEWING, for the Home Decorator. Forty-eight pages of illustrated directions for making slip-covers and curtains; also dressing tables; lampshades and other useful articles for the home. Price 25 cents postpaid (coin preferred). Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplains St., Chicago, Ill.

"God the Only Cause and Creator" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, June 5. The Golden Text was, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created" (Revelation 4:11).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Know ye that the Lord he is God: it is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves; we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture. Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and bless his name" (Psalms 100:3, 4).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The Scriptures imply that God is All-in-all. He is divine Principle, Love, the universal cause, the only creator, and there is no other self existence" (p. 331).

The Stars and Stripes, floating in the breeze or borne at the head of processions by Americans, is a sight that universally thrills the onlooker with patriotic fervor and devotion. Our country's flag! Whatever our religious or political beliefs, the American flag symbolizes for all true Americans the principles of this nation, the ideals of a true democracy the sacrifices by which our country became the greatest and finest in all the world.

On Flag Day, June 14 of each year, the people of our nation celebrate the adoption of the Stars and Stripes by the Continental Congress on June 14, 1777. Today, we are observing the hundred and sixty-first anniversary of that historic occasion. In cities and towns throughout our land, loyal and patriotic American citizens are fittingly observing this glorious day in our nation's history. Flag Day is an occasion of special significance to members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, for we have followed Old Glory into many alien lands. We have fought in its defense on foreign soil and in hostile waters. We have borne it triumphant and proud thru the smoke and fire of battle. We have seen our comrades die to preserve its unbroken history and we have wrapped their bodies in its brilliant folds before we consigned them to their heroes' graves.

On June 14, 1777, the Congress of the Republic of the United States adopted a resolution providing "that the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation." The thirteen stripes in our flag today represent the thirteen original colonies. Its colors were selected for their symbolism—red for courage, white for purity and blue for truth and fidelity. In 1794, two stripes and two stars were added to the flag in honor of Kentucky and Vermont. By 1818, five more states had joined the Union, so Congress decreed, on April 14, 1818, that the flag should consist permanently of the thirteen original stripes but that its blue field should carry one white star for every state then in existence or later to be added to the nation.

This law still is in effect today so that the American flag now bears forty-eight stars, one for each of the forty-eight great states that stretch from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the borders of Canada to the Gulf of Mexico.

Thruout our history, our flag has grown. During the war of 1812, it bore only fifteen stars. In the War with Mexico, it had twenty; during the War with Spain, there were forty-five and all forty-eight were in place when this country entered the world war on April 6, 1917.

According to historical legend, it was in 1776 that Betsy Ross, of Philadelphia, designed and made, at the suggestion of General Washington, the beautiful red, white and blue flag which, a year later, was to be accepted by Congress. Also according to generally accepted accounts, the Stars and Stripes first was carried into battle at Brandywine, and on February 14, 1778, Old Glory is reported to have received its first salute ever paid by foreign vessels, when hoisted aboard the Ranger, commanded by Captain Paul Jones near the French coast.

The American flag today and all it symbolizes, constitutes our country's greatest national pride and challenge. We who live in this generation owe not only our love and loyalty to the Stars and Stripes, but it is our privilege and our duty to dedicate ourselves to the high task of preserving its integrity against all alien and enemy forces. Loyalty to the flag is loyalty to America—to its laws, its ideals, its traditions. Fidelity to our flag must be based upon fidelity to those principles of honor and justice and liberty for which our forefathers bled and died.

Law evasion, the weakening of the social structure of our country, the treason of those in high places in our government and economic world, are threats to the American flag, because they are threats against the principles that compose the very foundation of the Constitution of the United States. As citizens of this country, and as members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, it remains with us and with all other patriotic Americans to keep Old Glory flying high, its colors unsullied, its honor untarnished.

Anything and everything that tends to destroy those principles of the Constitution on which our government is founded, must be uprooted and destroyed, so that we may preserve, intact, the principles which have always been exemplified in the American flag.

King Kong To Be Wrestling Feature

One of the most bizarre and unique characters ever to enter a wrestling ring will be featured on Thursday night, June 16th at the wrestling show to be held in the Chamber of Commerce in Joliet, when King Kong will meet Bad Boy Brown in a special challenge match.

King Kong who recently made an appearance in the Chamber of Commerce Arena heard of the way that Brown had been defeating his opponents here by using unethical and unruly methods, he issued the challenge thru his interpreter. Brown of course in his usual egotistical way, accepted the challenge.

King Kong is one of the strongest men in the business. He was born in Ethiopia of Gypsy parentage and after traveling during his early boyhood days he shipped on a tramp steamer and finally landed in Paris, France, where Jeff Dixon the American sports promoter in France interested him in wrestling and handled his affairs for him. After a successful career which took him all over Europe, Dixon shipped him to America where in his American debut he defeated Joe Savoldi in New York. He has been undefeated since entering the U. S. A. and claims he will not stop until he forces Ali Baba into a match with him. King Kong stands close to six feet, weighs 230 pounds has a shaved head and a luxuriant beard. He is without doubt the queerest looking athlete ever to enter the wrestling ranks. A New York reporter likened him to a combination of Ali Baba, the missing link and Frankenstein's monster.

King Kong will meet Brown in a one hour match best two falls out of three receiving the decision.

The supporting matches to this outstanding match have not fully been arranged, altho Phil Malloy the stock yards champion and one of the meanest men in the wrestling business has been signed by Walter Shauhnessy but his opponent has not been decided upon.

The first bout will take place at 8:10 p. m. Thursday evening, June 16th at the Chamber of Commerce Building in Joliet.

Auto Races At N. River Rd. Fair Grounds Sunday

Jimmy Snyder of Chicago, and Ronnie Householder of Indianapolis, will renew their speed duel at the Fair Grounds Speedway, River Road & North Ave., Chicago, next Sunday afternoon, that began Memorial Day at Indianapolis and brought about the most blistering pace the historic old bricks of the Motor Speedway have ever seen.

Snyder, in 1937 rang up a new speed for qualifying with an average of more than 125 miles an hour and the fastest lap that had ever been driven there of more than 130 MPH.

Householder, this year, cracked Snyder's qualifying mark for the 25-mile test, but has yet to equal Jimmy's speed for a single lap.

In the Memorial Day race, Rex Mays started out in front but was overhauled by both Snyder and Householder and they ran in first and second positions for more than half the race, battling it out, hub to hub in one of the most spectacular and death-defying races that has ever been staged on any speedway.

Despite their bitter rivalry behind the wheels of their cars, the two pilots are warm friends off the track but there will be no truce when they get the green flag at the start of next Sunday's race. Both are in the thick of the battle for the national driving championship which is awarded on points won on dirt tracks as well as at the Hoosier speedway and patrons of Carl Stockholm's plant Sunday afternoon may expect thrills that can be produced only on the dirt track circuit.

With this little private battle going on there will be plenty of competition from other sources during the Sunday inaugural program at the Fair Grounds. Four of the pilots who entered the money-winning class at Indianapolis will be on hand to furnish any little challenge they may receive from either Snyder or Householder.

Chet Miller who had to stop with only one lap to go at Indianapolis for gas, lost not only second place to Wilbur Shaw, but also $5100 in prize money, will go to the post in the inaugural. He finished in third place after having driven a beautiful race all the way.

Ted Horn, always a popular favorite in Chicago, and always a real threat at the 500-mile classic, drove to fourth place this year and is coming back to Chicago in his first appearance on the dirt tracks of the middle west this year.

Chet Gardner, veteran, who came out of the desert of Arizona to become one of the outstanding and most consistent pilots in the game, will be another. He rode to fifth place at Indianapolis.

Cultivation

BEFORE transplanting plants raised in hot beds and cold frames, harden them off by leaving off the sash during the day. If the weather is good, leave off during the last few nights before moving the plants.

EVERY improvement that you have on your grounds is really an investment that can be measured in dollars and cents of increased value to the property.

MAKE THE CARE of your garden a part of the day's routine. A few moments each day will then be sufficient.

LIME IS NOT a plant food. Its value is in correcting a sour or acid soil condition and in making clayey soils looser and more pliable.

IF YOU HAVE an open fireplace, use oak and save the ashes. Hardwood ashes are an excellent fertilizer and when purchased are expensive.

FROGS and toads, hornets, garden spider, dragon flies, are some of the desirable friends in your garden for they feed on both the adults and the larvae of harmful forms.

ARSENATE OF LEAD is the only really successful preventative for Japanese Beetle. Before using, get detailed instructions as it is very poisonous.

EVERGREENS should have plenty of water. Spray the foliage frequently to wash off the dust and dirt and to keep down the attacks of the red spider.

USE AN oiled rag to wipe off your tools after using. The slight filament of oil will generally keep them from rusting.

The Land of Opportunity

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman

Sentinels of the Republic

A great thinker once said that every time he stood in the presence of a boy he wanted to take off his hat to the possibilities there represented.

Much the same idea must occur to countless Commencement Day orators as they address this month the eager army of American youth being graduated from high schools and colleges throughout our Nation.

For despite set-backs and discouragements, that thought applies to the young men and women of America today, as to the youth of no other nation on earth.

It was for them—as for their predecessors—that America was established as the land of opportunity; a land where no aspiration could be too high, no achievement too great for the individual to attain by virtue of his own enterprise, his own courage, his own ability.

That's why the men who made America wrote into its fundamental law a Bill of Rights which guarantees to every man freedom of conscience, of speech and of opportunity.

And that's where America differs from those newer governments of Europe, where all rights are subordinated to the will of the man or the party in power, and where individual opportunity—with the press and religion—is in chains.

To the youth of America has been bequeathed a priceless heritage of opportunity, which unfavorable conditions can delay, but must never destroy. It was won for them, often at heroic sacrifice, by the generations that out of a wilderness hewed our great nation. It is theirs to use to the limit of their ability.

But it is theirs also to preserve for the generations that follow. The future of America is not in the hands of an abstract fate. As always, it is in the hands of youth. It is the responsibility of youth, now and through the years ahead, to keep our nation as bright in opportunity, as gloriously free, as did their forbears in the past.

And as we consider the need to preserve that spirit of freedom, which America above all nations represents, well may an older generation bow in respect to the responsibilities—and the opportunities—which await our young graduates today.

"WHAT'S THAT FUNNY NOISE?"

THAT "funny noise," young man, is a very important part of your life. A sound just like that wakened the doctor in the middle of the night — when you were born.

That "funny noise" gave your Father the breath-taking news that you had just said "Daddy" out loud for the first time. It's a noise, young fellow, that gives Mother more chance to enjoy your growing up. You see, that "noise" jingles for the grocer, too, and the drug store, and the laundry, and the department store, and brings to your house all those smiling people and strange boxes while Mother stays home and plays with you. Haven't you noticed how much Mother talks into it on those rainy days when people outdoors carry those queer things over their heads? It saves her any number of steps every day.

Perry Seeks To Avoid Additional Taxes

Symbolic of efforts to avoid additional taxes was the resolution introduced last week by Representative Joseph Sam Perry of Wheaton, in which he asked all state elective and state code officers to provide for the Legislature a statement showing the amount of appropriations remaining unexpended.

The resolution further asked that the unexpended appropriations be broken down into three parts, the first setting forth the amount already contracted for or earmarked so as to be unavailable for diversion to relief. Second, any part that is really impossible to be set apart so that the remaining amount of all unexpended appropriations that might be tapped for relief could be properly placed before the members of the General Assembly, so they might determine if it is possible to provide additional relief money by reducing other appropriations instead of increasing taxes.

Representative Perry stated that he firmly believed a larger amount than has been appropriated is necessary for relief, but he also stated that he believed upon close analysis of all appropriations, it would be possible to reduce a number of the appropriations, and thus obtain money for relief without increasing taxes. To that end the resolution was introduced, and adopted by unanimous vote.

Wide Variety Of Tours

Wars and rumors of wars in Europe and the Orient will give the people of the United States an opportunity to see America this year and under most favorable circumstances, in the opinion of Rock Island passenger traffic officials. With that in view, the Rock Island is announcing a wider variety than heretofore of all-expense plan summer tours for 1938—escorted or independent.

Under the name of "Around America", the Rock Island Lines, in cooperation with the Southern Pacific and the Great Northern railroads, will conduct during the coming summer months, all-expense tours covering the greater part of the western half of the United States. The tours will be conducted exclusively in air-conditioned equipment.

Advance literature, illustrating these tours include the "Around America" tour, starting from Chicago and visiting Mexico, Carlsbad Caverns, California and Catalina Island, Oregon, Washington, Canada and Glacier Park and Colorado Rockies. Also, "Summer Outings" in Colorado and Yellowstone, and a "Banner Tour to Yellowstone National Park", with a visit to Salt Lake City, Utah. Likewise, special tours to Pike's Peak and Colorado Springs and Estes Park, Colorado. Tours will be available from June to September.

Tour booklet will be forwarded on request. Write W. J. Leahy, Passenger Traffic Manager, Rock Island Lines, LaSalle Station, Chicago, Ill. According to Mr. Leahy, "The price of a train ticket brings health, wide variety of entertainment and travel that is an education in itself."

In King's Drawing Room

During the reign of terror in France in the early 1790s the prisons of Paris presented a scene seldom witnessed in history. In the evening the aristocrats of both sexes assembled in the common jail room—always called by them the drawing room—powdered and elegantly dressed; saluted one another by their former noble names, played cards and chess just as though they were assembled in the king's palace.

Sarah Lynn leaned back in a great deep chair which made her seem childishly small, and the aviator stretched himself flat again, his hands folded behind his yellow head. "This was the one I liked," Jordan said, his fingers halting.

"But I shall go down from this airy space, this swift white peace, this stinging exaltation; And time will close about me, and my soul stir to the rhythm of the daily round, Yet, having known, life will not press so close, And always I shall feel time ravel thin about me, For once I stood In the white windy presence of eternity."

Sarah Lynn felt a little shiver of appreciation. She had known it, the swift white peace, the stinging exaltation. Life would never press too close on her, on Gunnar; they wouldn't let it! They were not earth-bound; they had dominion.

Jordan played on and on, quietly now, with a conviction of serenity and permanence, and the crimson of the hearth died down to a hot, gray ash. It seemed to Sarah Lynn that her heart must literally burst with its weight of surging happiness.

Gunnar let Sarah Lynn take the Hermod up alone one day and stood waiting proudly while she brought it smoothly and beautifully to earth. It was her accolade: sign and symbol of his utter trust.

They walked on the shore beside the blue, bright water and he took her in his arms. "So," he said, lifting his head after a long kiss, "you are fearless, also wise. You fly safely and skillfully my Hermod. I love you."

Sarah Lynn pulled herself out of his embrace to look up at him. "Gunnar, do you love me? Me?"

"Have I not said—"

"I know. But I mean—is it only because I've learned to fly properly? Because I'm not afraid? Because I do the kind of things you like? Or is it—myself?"

He laughed aloud. "This is a folly. I love you because you are you—without fear, and wise, a good flier. It is answered."

"No, but—there was a shadow in the eyes of the queer, dark Dana girl. 'Don't you think we ought to care for people themselves, not for what they do? Not even for what they are? I think—'"

"It needs no thinking," he said. "But—Gunnar, suppose—suppose I stopped flying?"

"Suppose you stopped living? Enough of folly! We finish!" He kissed her again.

Lynn Dana wrote to his traveling cousin:

"I wish you were here to see them now, Sally Ann. By and by, I suppose, an inexorable calendar will catch them and clip their wings, but now they are soaring!"

"Their visit at Jordan's Tahoe lodge seemed to set them free. They are armored against everything now, even poor Cousin Adelaide. They say little of plans but I gather they are to marry in a fortnight and go at once to Norway where he has excellent prospects."

"I think—at least, I suspect—that they will fly the Atlantic in the Hermod, in complete secrecy. I doubt if they will even tell me."

"Of course I shall miss them blankly, bleakly; it doesn't need your nimble and trained imagination to understand how much of flavor and fragrance will go out of things, but I shall manage to rejoice for our dark duckling hatched into an eagle's mate."

"There's something lyric, something mythical and symbolic about their romance: partly, I suppose, because of its evanescent quality, because they are looking constantly into the bright face of danger. It's hard to imagine them middle-aged and portly; I can't see beyond youth for them."

"Doubtless this is all because I'm a little low in my mind on another count. Granny is going down hill very perceptibly, and it gets me. Everything dimming—eyes, ears; a slowing down all around. She senses it of course, and she loathes it. 'So, then! Sorry you're missing the skylarks but glad you are being spared the matriarch's defeat.'"

Her great-grandmother's condition was evident even to Sarah Lynn's high-keyed preoccupation, and she ached with pity and protest. The old woman sent for her and went at once to the point.

"Sairy Lynn, I guess I don't need to tell you I'm getting older every minute."

"I know, Great-granny." She took a small, lean claw in her warm grasp. "And I wish I could give you twenty years."

"The last ones? Think now, looking so far ahead, that you won't want 'em? Well, you will, let me tell you; you'll want 'em the worst way. And you'll know you can't have 'em. Well, I'm obliged to you for the wish."

"I'm sorry," Sarah Lynn said. "Oh, Great-granny, I wish there was something I could do!"

"Well, there is," the nonagenarian said briskly. "That's what I'm getting at. That's why I sent for you. I know you're getting married and putting out, quick's ever you can, Sairy Lynn, and that's right. I want you should. But there's a favor you could do me first."

"Anything!" she said gladly. "Anything I can—"

"I should admire to have a ride in your flying-machine, Sairy Lynn."

"Of course, Great-granny! I'd adore it."

"Well, there's plenty that won't," she said grimly. "When the folks hear of it there'll be the devil to pay and no pitch hot, but I don't care. I've got a hankering to see what it's like. I want to ride up in the sky and look down at birds flapping their wings that I always envied, and I want to look down at Danavale and all the foolish

'cause we lost so many critters and we had to make the loads light, and he was young and stout. I'd admire to have him here, today, looking down like I am. Well, forevermore! If that's all Mt. Hamilton amounts to, and the way I've been looking up at it for eighty-odd years! My, but the air's nice up here, Sairy Lynn! Awful light and thin . . . Makes a body drowsy . . ."

The flier looked back and saw her nodding. It was too bad to let her lose an instant of this thrill. She executed a mild side slip and the old woman sat up with a jerk and grinned at her.

"Hey, Sairy Lynn! What you up to? Trying to spill me out?" She looked down with renewed animation but very soon she was sleepy again.

Sarah Lynn waited until she had her full attention and then she inquired, both by words which she knew could not be heard and by unmistakable gestures whether she was ready to descend.

She shook her head violently. "No! No! I don't want to go down!"

"Enough of folly. We finish!"

houses the folks built and the road your Gre-gramper and I come over in the covered wagons, dirty and dog-tired and snailing along with the half-dead critters hauling us. I want to do that once before I die."

"And you shall, Great-granny, dear," she told her. "I promise—cross my heart!" Gunnar would loan her the Hermod for this ritual.

CHAPTER XI

It was a pretty day. Gunnar approved the weather, and he warmly approved the project. It was exactly what he wished he might have done for Grandmother Gudrun.

Lynn Dana was deeply pleased. "She gave you your wings; right to share them with her," he nodded.

The colony came, the protestants, at least, anxious, indignant, annoyed, and the harried Emma Waters kept saying, "Now, Mis' Dana, where's your handkerchief? Mis' Dana, you went and took your knitted jacket off!"

Wrapped like a little old royal mummy, she was finally lifted into the cabin of the Hermod in Gunnar's long arms.

"I'm obliged to you, young feller," she thanked him. "And I'm real pleased about you and my child. I've set store by Sairy Lynn from the first minute I laid eyes on her in the cradle. I believe you're going to make her a good husband."

"I will make her a good husband," he told her gravely, fastening the seat belt about her, getting out again, passing through the group of disapproving faces.

The matriarch rapped on the window with her lean knuckles and waved at her elderly daughters, her middle-aged granddaughters, and gave her shrill, cackling laugh.

"Now, go on home and don't fret," she admonished them, "you poor old things!"

Then Sarah Lynn Dana took her ship away from the pleasant landscape into the calm skies, carrying the ninety-seven-year-old pioneer who had crossed the plains in a covered wagon to found the dynasty of Danavale.

Sarah Lynn looked back at her often and every time she smiled all over her small parchment face and waved a claw.

"I'm having the best time I ever had in all my born days, Sairy Lynn," she chirped, unaware that her wavering treble did not carry over the sound of the motor. "Beats everything. Even the first day in the wagon-train, and the day we knew we was in California. My land, what would your Gre-gramper think of this?"

"Well, poor Hank! When I think how he come across the continent, most of the way a-foot,

I don't want to have it over. I want to keep on going up and up and up!"

"All right," her great-granddaughter said, and set the Hermod to climbing. After a while they encountered a soft sea of pink clouds and rose over it. It was an exquisite lovely thing to see, but the passenger's sharp chin was resting on her breast and she appeared to be sleeping soundly. Sarah Lynn thought it a pity; there would be time enough and to spare for napping down in the little old Dana house when she and Gunnar were far across the sea, so she did another sharp slip to rouse her, but the small figure in the thick wrappings did not stir.

Sarah Lynn looked at her for a long time. Then she pulled off a glove and tossed it back. It struck the shawled shoulder smartly, but the head did not lift. Then the pilot headed for the coast, over the Santa Cruz mountains to the Pacific and flew low along the shore. After a while she shook the tears out of her eyes and looked into the sunset; she thought she had never seen one so lavish, so jubilant.

She rose and climbed and set out for home and when she circled the field at San Jose she could see the diminished descendants of Sarah Ann Kittredge Dana, pioneer, in an anxious huddle, gazing up. When Those unfamiliar with the many problems besetting the forester in his efforts to reforest denuded lands often wonder why there should be a high mortality on many hand-planted plantations. In some instances this has run 100 per cent, and the entire area must be replanted. Usually foresters expect from 20 to 30 per cent mortality and are happy with a survival of 70 to 80 per cent. In fact, writes Albert Stoll, Jr., in the Detroit News, they plan on this when the first trees are set by over-planting the land at least 30 per cent. If fortune should smile on the efforts and all the trees lived eventually the stands would have to be thinned out.

In recent years drouth and extreme heat have raised havoc with many pine tree plantations. The seedlings didn't have much chance to survive, and those that did were stunted.

Frequently the choice of the planting site brings failure, particularly if it happens to be in a frost pocket or on extremely sterile soil. Poor planting perhaps runs second to drouth and heat. If the seedling roots are not properly placed in the ground and completely covered with soil the chances are the tree will die. Freezing also contributes, as well as snow damage. Insects, rust and fungus growth often wipe out plantations, and this is a problem for which no satisfactory means of control has been uncovered. During the winter when snows cover all but the tops of the small trees rabbits and mice often girdle the terminal branches, dwarfing the growth, and if completely girdled farther down the tree will die. In some instances the young trees are destroyed by persons wandering aimlessly over the plantations and stepping on the seedlings.

Unlike planting around the home where water, shade and protection abound, the forest-planted seedling must shift for itself, and if the elements are unkind its life is short.

she set her ship down gently her head was high.

Gunnar opened the door, looking closely at her, and the rest came hurrying up. She got out slowly, without speaking, and they stared at her. She wasn't crying, but they could see traces of tears on her face.

"Mother!" some of the elderly daughters called, and "Oh, Grandma!" a middle-aged granddaughter cried out shrilly.

Then there was a wild clamor of talking and weeping, of questions and reproaches. Sarah Lynn stood quietly in the midst of them, trying to keep remembering how the sunset had looked. "Great-granny," she steadied her voice, "Great-granny—didn't—come down."

Gunnar comforted Sarah Lynn in the difficult days which followed. "Do not listen to the wailing," he admonished her.

"But they say I killed her, Gunnar."

"And I say you gave to her life again. Not choking in blankets but boldly in the sky, as she would wish, that small grandmother. Age closed her in like a trap, you opened the door."

"Oh, I know! But, I keep dreaming of her, huddled down in her seat, swinging over the belt—"

"That is folly. Think of her looking down with pleasure."

"Yes. Only I did so want her at my wedding. It isn't going to be a very nice wedding, Gunnar."

He shrugged. "What matter? It is a wedding. That is enough. Then we go!"

They were walking back to her house from an evening with Lynn Dana.

"Gunnar, I promise, I'll stop grieving about Great-granny."

"That is well. Death in age, in sickness, in helplessness is good. All such should be put away."

She came out of her mood of exaltation with a cry of protest. "Oh, Gunnar—no! That's horrible!"

"Man," he persisted, "must learn from Nature. To let survive—how do you say it?"

"The survival of the fittest, but who can say, who can judge and decide who is the fittest? Don't you see what a frightful danger it would be? How wicked people could bribe and corrupt—And some of the finest minds and spirits are in frail bodies. Do you want a world full of prize-fighters? Think"—she said hotly—"think of my Uncle Lynn!"

He shrugged. "You speak now of the exception. That would be bad. But in the end, after five hundred years, would not the race be greatly improved?"

Sarah Lynn wasn't interested in the state of the race five hundred years ahead. She was disturbed. Gunnar had aired those ideas before, but never so vehemently.

She had to put herself to sleep that night resolutely, remembering the thrilling beauty of the plane against the moon.

But she kept her promise to stop mourning over the death of the ancestress. All her loyal cohorts helped, and a long, understanding cable from Sally Ann, and most of all, the man in the wheeled-chair.

"Let's put a period to it, Sarah Lynn," he said. "You were privileged to pay back in an hour what you had owed her all your life. She gave you your freedom; you gave her hers."

So peace came back to Sarah Lynn for her last days in Danavale. She said to her father, "Dad, I'm to be married in Great-granny's parlor Monday morning at nine, and then we're flying east. I wanted you to know. I'm telling Bill, too."

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

BOOKS IN BRIEF

Ulysses Made Great Hero in Homer's Saga

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

W² FORGET 70 per cent of all we have ever learned—so the scientists say. But fortunately, we never entirely forget anything. The path is still in the brain, though not plain enough for use. No doubt you remember Ulysses as a former acquaintance, but perhaps his story as told by the immortal Homer, is vague.

When Paris stole Helen of Troy from Greece, all the kings of Greece were held to their oaths to fight in her behalf.

Ulysses, noted for his wisdom, refused to go into such a war. His life was happy with Penelope, his beautiful wife, so he feigned madness and went about the countryside sowing seeds that had been cooked. The councilmen of Greece suspected cunning so they placed the young son of Ulysses in the path of his plow. When the "madman" reached the child he turned the plow aside, thus disclosing his sanity.

Elizabeth James

The ten years of siege at the walled city of Troy were tedious to Ulysses, who ever longed for Penelope and who feared for her safety after his long absence. In olden days a beautiful woman was none too safe without a husband to protect her. Glad was he indeed, when Troy fell into the hands of the Greeks after the trick of the wooden horse. With light heart he sailed away.

But ill winds beset him and Ulysses wandered over the whole sea, suffering disappointments and nar-

"GREATEST UNKNOWN"

Seven cities claim to be the birthplace of the Greek poet Homer. There is no accurate source for any definite information about the life of this man, yet he composed two of the greatest epics in all the centuries of mankind. We do know that he lived sometime between the Sixth and Twelfth centuries before Christ was born, and we know that in old age Homer was blind. He made his living wandering from city to city entreating the people with the stories of the Trojan war and of the wanderings of Ulysses. His "Iliad" and "Odyssey" are known round the world.

rowly escaping death on many occasions. It was even necessary for him to make a trip into Hades, land of departed souls.

Once he and his men found themselves on the island ruled by the one-eyed giants known as Cyclops. They hid in a cave which they discovered to be the home of a giant, who gleefully shut them in his cave and killed two men each day for his dinner. While he slept one afternoon, Ulysses heated a staff and put out the eye of the giant, hoping then to escape. But the passage-way was narrow and the giant carefully felt each animal as he let his sheep out to pasture.

With cunning, the Greeks killed all the sheep and skinned them. In the morning they walked out, holding the skins over them.

Other adventures beset the men. There was the island of the Sirens, the lovely women who sang divinely, luring men to their island where the men were then powerless. By stuffing cloth and wax into the ears of his men and having himself lashed securely to the mast, Ulysses passed the Sirens, being the first man to hear them and to escape their charm. Another adventure was the island where an enchantress turned men into animals, but Ulysses gained power over her and freed all the men whom she held.

Penelope's Troubles.

After wandering long and far, Ulysses reached Greece. He had heard of the suitors who had fastened themselves to the household of Penelope on the assumption that her husband had long been dead. They had stolen her substance until she had much ado to protect her husband's home. To evade them she had said that as soon as she completed the web which she was weaving, she would choose a husband. Each day she wove, and each night she unravelled, but now they had discovered her trickery and had forced her to set a date for choosing a husband from among them.

Disguised as a beggar, Ulysses went to the back of his home. The only living thing that recognized him was his dog and it died of joy. His old servant, now a swineherd, recognized a scar on Ulysses, and rejoicing and sorrowing together, told his master of the situation in his home. He praised Penelope's skill in handling the lecherous men. Ulysses sent for his son, now a man, and they two planned revenge.

As a beggar Ulysses went to the banquet. While the revelry was high, he removed the weapons from the hall, leaving the suitors without arms. The time came, and with his son, Ulysses killed the suitors.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By REV. HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, © Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for June 12

FACING THE SUPREME TEST OF SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:32-36. GOLDEN TEXT—Not what I will, but what thou wilt. Mark 14:36. PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus in the Garden. JUNIOR TOPIC—In Gethsemane. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Courage in the Face of Danger. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Challenge of God's Will.

No man has ever faced such a crisis as Jesus met in the Garden of Gethsemane, for He was the Son of God incarnate in order to bear the sins of the world. No one can ever fully understand the agony of soul involved when God "made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him" (II Cor. 5:21). It is, therefore, true that we may never say that we have gone "through Gethsemane." But there is a very real sense in which our Lord's experience is shared by His disciples, in a lesser degree and as ordinary human beings.

Our lesson brings before us the closing scene of Thursday before the crucifixion. The day has been crowded with important events, among them the eating of the Passover, the revelation that there was a traitor among the twelve, the institution of the Lord's supper, the precious words of the upper room, the intercessory prayer in the garden.

I. Exceeding Sorrowful (vv. 32-36).

The text uses many words to convey the depth of His soul's agony, as though it were impossible to express it in the faulty medium of speech. So it is, for our Lord here experienced something far more serious than a dread of physical death. He was not a coward. He was not afraid to die. His soul was about to have put upon it its spotless sinlessness the stain and dishonor of the world's sins. Little wonder that He was "sorrowful even unto death" (v. 34).

Since this was the road the Master trod, should not His servants tread it still?

II. Alone with God (vv. 37-41).

Jesus took with Him into the secluded place in the Garden the three who were closest to Him in the circle of disciples. He counted on their fellowship and sympathy in His hour of anguish. Merely to have them near Him, to know that they were there to watch and pray even though they could not share His holy burden, was to be a comfort to Him. We try to do as much for one another in hours of bereavement and disappointment, but how much greater was the opportunity of these three, and how inordinately they failed. The spirit was willing (v. 38), but the flesh took the upper hand, and they slept! He was alone with His Father, when He prayed that if it were possible the hour might pass from Him, but in true and beautiful submission said, "not what I will, but what thou wilt."

The follower of Jesus will know this experience, too. While he will ever find it to be true that there is nothing more precious than the friends God gives him, he should prepare himself to expect the arm of flesh to fail him. There is no more bitter experience in human relationships than to count on those who should stand by, come what may, and to find that they have slept through our hour of soul-struggle.

III. Betrayed by a Kiss (vv. 42-46).

To betray the one who had done nothing but good, who had loved him and served him even in the washing of his feet, this would have been far more than one could have expected of even the sin-blackened heart of a Judas. But he fills the measure of his iniquity by overflowing by betraying his Lord with the sign of affection—a kiss.

We know full well that we may not stand on the same ground as our Lord even here, for, whereas He had done nothing to merit betrayal, we at our best are not able to stand forth without fault. Nevertheless, great is the hurt when we face the betrayals of life. It may be one whom we have befriended, who has been the object of our loving thought and care, and who in the hour when he thinks to gain himself some advantage or avenge some fancied wrong strikes us in the back, even as he smilingly professes to be a friend. Shall we be embittered in soul and give like for like? God forbid! Let us rather say as Jesus did to Judas, "Friend, wherefore art thou come?" (Matt. 26:50.)

If We Knew All

They ask me for secrets of holiness. For myself I know no secret than to love God with all my heart and my neighbor (who is all mankind) as myself.

Men of the Mounted

by Captain G. Elliott-Nightingale Copyright, WNU

A CHISELER STARTS A RIOT

FOR a dozen days and nights the continuous roll of the tom-toms and the weird, blood-chilling shrieking of the Salteaux Indians had echoed and re-echoed over the Athabaskan plains. Meanwhile, in the tents and tepees, babies died in the arms of mothers too starved to suckle them, while others, including the aged and ill, were slowly dying from hunger and the 30-below-zero weather that had been gripping the region for weeks. And, as the Salteaux suffered and died, the warriors and braves, with the help of some smuggled rotgut whisky were dancing themselves into an ugly, fighting, bloodthirsty mood. They were steaming up for a little skull-splitting and scalp-lifting party to be staged on the handful of whites who were responsible for their pitiable condition.

The Salteaux, a rather superior group, were justified in their anger and rage, for the administration of their affairs had fallen into the hands of a double-dyed grafter and chiseler. When the Great White Mother made the treaty with the Salteaux, she not only agreed to give them equipment, horses and cows with which to begin farming, but she also agreed to give them food and supplies twice a week until they were well established and prosperous. Everything went along fine until some underling in the Indian affairs department was placed in charge while his superior was off on a rather extended vacation down east. From this time on, the food supplies for the Salteaux began to diminish. Each time the rations were handed out, they weighed a few ounces less than before, with the result that after a week or two the allotments reached the most ridiculous proportions, and the Salteaux began to grumble out loud. To make matters worse, game was exceedingly scarce in the region that winter, and even rabbits were few and far between. Moreover, had there been furs and skins, the Salteaux could have traded for food at the Hudson Bay Trading post located right on the reservation.

And now, with the tribe slowly starving to death in the middle of a stiff Athabaskan winter, it was time for action. Having worked themselves into a frenzy of rage and hate, the warriors and braves swooped down on the government warehouses and helped themselves to a few tons of flour, sorghum, bacon and other staples. The underling in charge made a faint squeak of protest, and right away two husky braves had him by collar and belt and were heaving him off into the distance. Loaded with all the food they could carry away, the Salteaux returned to their tepees and had the first really decent feed in weeks. And, as they fed and gorged themselves, the Men of the Mounted were on their way to investigate what was termed an "Indian outrage."

The officer in charge, although a fearless policeman, was a poor hand with Indians, and his opening remarks were to the effect that the Great White Mother was deeply grieved to learn that her Salteaux children had committed this terrible crime (taking the food that rightfully belonged to them). Furthermore, the poor misguided, or misinformed officer asked them why they committed the robbery when everybody knew that the agent handed out plenty of food twice a week. Naturally, the Salteaux began to think that the red-coat was insane. Did he not know that they were starving? Did he not know that the food ration had been growing smaller and smaller until there was not enough for one child, let alone a brave? No, the officer did not know this.

Furthermore, he rather brusquely stated that they were not starving at all, and that the rations given them were more than sufficient. This was the spark to the powder. The braves began fondling their rifles and clubs, and they moved in close, dangerously close. The air was electrified with the tension of impending battle. Up to this time there had never been any misunderstandings, nor had there ever been shots exchanged between the Salteaux and the Mounted Police, and it wasn't long before an ordinary red-coated constable was down among the ugly Salteaux patching things up and, incidentally, learning the truth about the diminishing rations. Needless to say, the quarrel was patched up so well that there has never been any more trouble with the Salteaux.

The chiseler? Well, he saddled up one morning and rode east. He must have kept on traveling, for he hasn't been seen since.

The Screech Owl

The screech owl, called by some the little horned owl, is a familiar bird in many sections. It is not as secluded in habits as are other members of the owl family and often is found nesting in bird boxes put up for martins and flickers.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Warns Against Food Fads and Fallacies

Nationally Known Food Authority Explains How They May Endanger Health

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th St., New York City.

AS SCIENCE and civilization have progressed, painstaking investigators have sought to replace ignorance with knowledge, to substitute truth for superstition. But in spite of their efforts, our eating habits are still influenced by a multitude of food fads and fancies, which should have no place in this enlightened age.

Some of these are harmless; others may endanger health. And the homemaker must learn to distinguish between fact and fancy.

Fish Is Not a Brain Food

One of the most persistent fallacies is the notion that certain kinds of food are especially beneficial for certain parts of the body. Many people believe that fish is a brain food and celery a nerve tonic. Lettuce is thought to be a soporific. None of these things is true.

The idea regarding fish probably arose because fish contains phosphorus and the brain also contains phosphorus. How simple it would be if one could increase brain power merely by eating fish. Unfortunately, there is nothing to it! The brain, like other parts of the body, requires a balanced diet. No case has ever been reported of a man soothing the irritated nerves of his wife by feeding her celery. And as for lettuce, it is a fine source of minerals, vitamins and gentle roughage, but it does not contain any narcotic drug that induces sleep.

Other Fallacies Disproved Science has exploded many common notions about vegetables which may change your ideas of what is best to buy and eat. Many homemakers prefer lettuce that is light green in color and they believe that string beans which snap are superior in quality. But it has been demonstrated that deep green lettuce is much richer in vitamins and that a snap in string beans merely indicates that the beans have been kept in a cold, moist place.

False Notions About Fruit

A score of superstitions cling to the eating of fruits. There is a false notion that acid-tasting fruits cause or aggravate rheumatism, because they produce "acidity." The truth is that most fruits, regardless of their acid taste, leave an alkaline ash following digestion. One often hears that fruit should not be taken at the same time as milk because the fruit acids will cause the milk to curdle. But the fact is that milk is always curdled in the stomach by the hydrochloric acid.

Not Necessary to Sip Milk

Another false idea is the widespread notion that milk must be sipped slowly or it will be difficult to digest. This has been refuted by a widely known investigator who made many tests. One day he fed a man a pint of milk in 10 seconds. The next day the same man was fed the same amount of milk in 10 minutes. On both occasions the contents of the stomach were examined a half hour later.

It was discovered that the milk which was drunk in 10 seconds had formed smaller curds than the milk which was sipped in 10 minutes. And in both cases, the curds were of practically the same consistency.

ther appreciated when one realizes that there are few pure proteins or pure carbohydrates, most foods containing varying proportions of protein, carbohydrate and fat. Such foods as dried peas and beans and whole grain cereals contain a substantial percentage of both starch and protein.

Dangers of Fasting

Fasting is urged by some fadists as a means of "detoxifying" the body. Advocates of this practice claim that it is nature's method of housecleaning. As a matter of fact, fasting for any length of time may be dangerous to health, because it may result in the accumulation of incomplete oxidation products of fat, and the development of acidosis.

Homemakers must put aside superstitions, half-truths and food fallacies if they are to nourish their families properly.

Put your faith only in established food facts. Remember that upon your knowledge and breadth of vision depend, to a great degree, not only the health but the happiness of your family.

Questions Answered

Mrs. A. F. R., Jr.—Light corn syrup yields nothing but energy values, but dark corn syrup is a good source of iron. Pure molasses is rich in calcium and iron.

Miss M. F.—Nut protein is similar to the protein of meat and fish and nuts may be used in place of these foods when desired. They should not replace milk and eggs, however, as with few exceptions, they are low in minerals and cannot compare with eggs or milk as a source of vitamins.

The Situation In China

Definite danger exists that 60,000,000 persons will starve in devastated areas in China before September, 1938, unless help reaches them. It is impossible to plant crops. Untold millions of homes have been destroyed. Enough camps to care for refugees, even in larger cities, cannot be constructed and maintained because of lack of funds.

The committee which acts for the American Red Cross in Shanghai estimates that 1,000,000 children, orphaned and homeless, are wandering thru the few provinces where surveys have been possible. In America Currency $1.00 will feed, clothe and shelter a Chinese child for one month; $18 will care for an adult refugee ONE YEAR.

Medical authorities in China say that, with hot weather approaching, devastating epidemics will be inevitable. Many refugees are now dying of typhoid, beri-beri, starvation, pneumonia. It is impossible to give medical attention to all wounded because of lack of personnel and supplies.

Civilian refugees exceed sufferers from warfare wounds eight to one. Estimates of observers on the scene say refugees are increasing at an average rate of 500,000 per day.

While reports of warfare fill news papers, the fact that 6,000,000 are homeless in the Yellow River Valley in North China from record floods has gone un-noticed in the foreign press. Practically nothing can be done for them.

Foreigners in China are impressed by the great desire of the Chinese people to help themselves. Overseas Chinese have sent $7,000,000 to Chinese for relief work during recent months. Many wealthy Chinese have given large percentages of their personal fortunes for relief of their countrymen.

Money received by the American Red Cross is being allocated to existing relief agencies in China by a committee of American business men appointed by United States Ambassador Nelson T. Johnson, and called the American Advisory Committee.

Will County's quota for the American Red Cross relief fund is $535. Money can be sent or brought to Mrs. Wm. Semmler of Mokena, Red Cross Chairman for Mokena, or to the Red Cross Office in the Post-office in Joliet or Mr. Cameron at the First National Bank in Joliet.

Re-Nominated

Four nominations to fill postmaster ships in Will County towns were sent to the United States Senate Tuesday afternoon. The nominations were for postmasterhips of Lockport, Braidwood, Beecher and Mokena.

On the list sent to the Senate for re-appointment were: Miss Louise Rump, Beecher; Miss Alice Dillon, Braidwood and Miss Margaret Maue, Mokena.

Just What Does It All Mean to Me?

That is the question that naturally comes to your mind when you think of or talk to your neighbors about the rather bewildering activities of the federal government in Washington.

Fragmentary news reports of congressional action or administration policies often are confusing, but if you will read William Bruckart's interpretative WASHINGTON DIGEST, which is published each week in this paper, you will know more about what all the moves on the capital checkerboard mean to you.

Through long service as a Washington correspondent, Mr. Bruckart is particularly well qualified for this particular job. He gives you an illuminating interpretation of what Congress is doing or is expected to do, and what is happening or is expected to happen in other departments of the government.

READ the Bruckart letter every week for an intelligent understanding of what is going on at the national capital.

UNIVERSALLY POPULAR

The "Sunday School Lesson" published each week in this newspaper has been adopted by thousands of church instructors throughout the United States as a regular part of their weekly work.

It is a review and exposition of the international lesson for each week, prepared by Dean Harold L. Lundquist of the Moody Bible Institute at Chicago, a recognized leader in the nation's church work. Dean Lundquist has been active in teaching youthful groups for years, thereby acquiring an insight into the needs of these people for understandable explanations of Bible passages.

In view of his accomplishments in church work, it is not surprising that Dean Lundquist's exposition of the weekly Sunday School lesson is being used in almost every community of the nation. As teacher or student you will find it extremely helpful.

General Advice

PLANTING that makes a house a more desirable home for a family, is also increased in value many times the actual cost of the improvement.

DO NOT BE too formal in your planting arrangement. A carefully worked out informality is often the most attractive because it more closely approaches the natural.

ROCK GARDENS are desirable but keep in mind that much of the charm depends upon its naturalness and it takes genius to create a natural looking artificial rock garden.

IT IS NOT generally known that Holland's renown for bulbs started when Dutch adventurers brought the first bulbs from the East Indies three centuries ago.

IF YOU ARE bothered by cats and dogs in your garden, spray with nicotine solution as the odor is distasteful to them. Use 1½ teaspoons of 40% nicotine sulphate in a gallon of water.

JOIN a Garden club. The interchange of ideas is of value, and people who have a common hobby are always agreeable companions.

WHERE one has been exposed to Poison Ivy, thorough and repeated washings of exposed parts with a strong alkaline kitchen or laundry soap is often effective.

IF YOU WORK in a garden without gloves, rub a little soap under the nails to keep them from staining.

IN SETTING out bedding plants, be sure and put them lower in the ground than originally. This is a good general rule for all transplanting.
